

TESTED

by Sam the Trap Man

The Manitoba Expedition Binocular Caddy from Gun City

This bino caddy has all the bells and whistles!

I have reviewed a sleek bino harness in a previous issue but sought a larger harness for bigger binoculars and additional storage space.

Here's what I like about it:

- It's big enough to fit some of the longer binoculars on the market while retaining a somewhat sleek design.
- Attention to detail has been shown with the design, including features such as an elasticated cleaning rag (I'm always using mine on cameras, phones and bins and end up losing them). The elasticated anchor string means it is always on hand.
- The front pocket is large enough to hold your range finder, a small knife, and seven rounds of ammunition. You don't need much else on an afternoon or morning hunt.
- The phone pocket at the back is firm but easy to get a phone in and out of.
- The side mesh pockets can fit an inReach, lighters, snacks, perfectly.
- Quality is consistently high throughout the entire unit with YKK zips, Duraflex clips and rugged fabric.
- The harness is comfortable and easy to get in and out of.
- There's even a rain cover to keep your bins dry and stop them fogging up with moisture.

As far as a bino harness for all serious missions, when you want to have your entire toolkit within reach, this model is the absolute bee's knees and built to last. It is ideal for roar hunting and recently I have been pairing it up with a 5-pocket bum bag to day hunt with and enjoying not needing to take a day pack.

This bino caddy is well designed and highly functional, with everything exactly where you need it to be.

www.guncity.com

